

THE LAW OF THE SHEEP AND THE SHEPARD

A good Shepard does not let his sheep become lost. Every sheep is accounted for. Should a Shepard have one hundred sheep and one or two stray away, the Shepard will leave the 98 or 99 others and find the ones that strayed away. Should a wolf be present, the Shepard will lead his sheep from the wolf and keep the wolf from getting too close to his sheep. It is simple accounting for the sheep. Good accounting of the flock causes the flock to grow.

The same that is said about sheep can be said about a dollar. If a hundred dollars is donated to a church, the pastor of the church becomes the Shepard of the hundred dollars. He should keep watch of each of the dollars, not wasting them and saving all he makes from the dollar being invested and using it to grow the herd. He protects his hundred dollars from the wolves and lions with his heart.

A good Shepard never uses his sheep for his own purpose, nor does he allow any friends or family. He never eats his sheep, nor does he allow any of his friends or family. He never trades or sells his sheep to serve himself nor does he allow any of his friends or family. He only uses his sheep to shave their wool and receive the abundance. He saves this abundance and uses the abundance to procure more herd, or to grow his herd. As his herd grows in abundance, he grows in abundance. This is the law of the sheep and the Shepard and it is an immutable law of God. It works as God planned it to work, unless the Shepard is all about watching over himself rather than watching over his flock. In this case neither the flock grows in abundance nor the Shepard.
